

Marion J. Bergman

Dr. Marion Bergman was born and educated in South Africa and practiced Pulmonary Medicine and Critical Care in Patchogue, New York for 33 years. During this time, she directed Brookhaven Memorial Hospital's Respiratory Care Services and served a term as Medical Staff President. In addition, Dr. Bergman regularly mentored medical and international students and, along with her family, provided scholarship support for South African Health professionals from underprivileged backgrounds. As an advocate for rural health and development in the developing world, she now directs Global Healthcare projects for MCW Global. In this capacity, Marion Bergman has played a leadership role in improving the state of oral health and building the capacity of health professionals in Tanzania. She is currently an Adjunct Assistant Professor at NYU's Rory Meyers College of Nursing, and she serves on several university health advisory boards, including the Kornberg Dental School at Temple University, the Johns Hopkins Bloomberg School of Public Health and the Medical School for International Health at Ben-Gurion University of the Negev. Dr. Bergman also serves as a trustee on several non-profit boards including the Global Child Dental Fund and Physicians for Human Rights. She recently completed a term as a trustee of American Jewish World Service including as Vice President. In addition to serving on the JBI Administrative Council, Marion Bergman is a member of the AJC's Board of Governors and currently chairs AJC's Africa Institute.